Dedication

Berea is the friendliest place. Here everyone belongs. It makes no difference whether that person is a stranger or a time worn faculty member, whether the clothes he wears be those of a bank president or a day laborer, before he has been on the campus five minutes, people speak to him.

Those people are you, the students and faculty of Berea, and it is you who make this place known to all who come here as a place where people like each other. A part of the atmosphere is different than it was thirty years ago but that is only because the school is growing. New buildings, more people, and closer schedules have stepped up the tempo here, but there is always time for a chat and a cheery hello.

It is you who have made it that way, and it is you who can keep it that way, so it is to you the people who are connected with Berea College, the students, faculty, the alumni and the students of the future that this 1955 CHIMES is dedicated.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

It is a great pleasure to write a greeting to all readers of the Chimes for 1955, the Centennial Year of Berea College.

Since the beginning of the College there have been enrolled 46,543 separate individuals. Students on the campus today and those who will follow are the inheritors of a very great college tradition.

We are proud of our hundred years' accomplishments, and yet the years that are important to us are the years ahead. The test of a college is found in the quality of the lives of its students and graduates. I am glad I feel happiness in the years that are past and confidence in the years ahead, as present students and those who follow become members of the alumni of Berea College.

—Francis S. Hutchins.

YEARBOOK OF BEREA COLLEGE

531 COLLEGE STATION
BEREA, KENTUCKY

Last spring five naive individuals sat together in the Hangout. "We'll make it the best book ever." "It will be something to keep to help remember....." "How will we get enough money.." "That will be no trouble..." "It will not be too hard. We will not make the same mistakes of years past...."

Now five tired but wiser people work furiously to complete the last few pages. It has been hard work but not without its rewards of a job done. We learned much that is involved in collecting, arranging, and producing material suitable for a yearbook.

This year's book is the result of a pioneering experience into the field of offset printing. We think it is rather appropriate for the commemoration of a school that is a pioneer in its field.

We, five haven't been in this thing by ourselves..... we owe a lot of thanks to all the staff members who have helped in getting the CHIMES in print and in the hands of its readers. A large portion of our thanks go to the people who have done business with us.... Mattson's Studio for the class portraits and the picture for the cover page; the Yearbook House for the actual printing and binding of our book and for their patience with us as we struggled through our copy. We give our appreciation to Mike Meth, Russell Sammons and Dr. Elizabeth Peck for their help in compiling the History. We will not forget the help that was given by the faculty members of "The CHIMES Committee".

This book may not be like the one we imagined last spring, but it is our effort to present a token of BEREA'S 100TH BIRTHDAY.

A Hundred Years of Progress...

"Berea College aims to carry the opportunity for higher education to one of the finest stocks of original Americans that are found in this country. We all know that they are of the finest and most patriotic elements of the nation, and the splendid work that Berea College is doing among them is thoroughly deserving of all appreciation."

—Warren G. Harding.

This is a brief and, we hope not too inadequate history of a college and its presidents.

THE FIRST BEREA SCHOOL HOUSE

In 1853 Cassius M. Clay, with a view toward establishing in this area a center of free speech, non-slave-holding interests, began to dispose of his large tract of land in the region, which included present-day Berea. There was nothing here at the time except a dense thicket of brush which later went by the name of "The Bresh." Even in succeeding years Principal Rogers' son remarked that a man who stepped six feet off the bridle paths could not be seen.

Meanwhile, a preacher by the name of John G. Fee had been teaching the doctrine of impartial love anywhere he could find a pulpit in the region along the Ohio River. It was this man who attracted the attention of Clay. So that Fee and his wife might be induced to make their home here, and perhaps to be the core of Clay's settlement, he offered Fee ten acres as a gift. Incidentally, these ten acres were not the first college property.

Fee settled here sometime in 1854 and for a short while preached in the "Old Glade Church." The following year, 1855, the first rude school house was built, but it must be remembered that Mr. Fee's early work was chiefly of an evangelical nature, "The planting of new churches and the conversion of new souls . . . "

Let us for a moment gather an impression of Fee the man. He was not a "Hell-fite-and-damnation" preacher. Rogers' recollection of Fee's preaching was, "His manner is calm but earnest, and grows in intensity as he proceeds, with shoulders thrown up and head bent forward. He makes his points clearly and quotes scripture for everyone of his propositions." And then there is the account of the famous Big Bend incident of 1858 where Fee went to conduct a service despite the warning of friends. In the middle of the meeting three men entered, and seizing Fee by the collar of his coat, dragged him to the door. Outside, dangling a rope before him, they swore he would be hanged unless he promised to leave the county and never return. Refusing to give such a promise, he and one of his companions were marched to the Kentucky River. At the bank of the river they took Fee's friend, ordered him to strip and flogged him with sycamore switches so that red welts showed on his back. Fee was threatened with "five hundred times as much." When he remained adamant and refused, the mob mounted their horses and marched the two captives a short distance. Unable to overcome Fee's firm stand, the mob left them.

Still another aspect of Fee's personality can be seen in his break with Cassius M. Clay at a public meeting near Slate Lick on July 4, 1856. There is a little doubt that Fee had been countenanced, so to speak, by many men in the area due to Clay's power and prestige. Even so, realizing the protection which Clay gave him, Fee dared to maintain there was a higher law condemning slavery and that a man should break with the constitution and the courts when they declared slavery legal. Fee's public statement of his position caused the two men to go their separate ways. Norwithstanding these things, Fee became the patriarch of Berea and remained so until his death in 1901.

The next consequential figure upon the Ridge was J. A. R. Rogers. He came in 1858 to a defenseless community. It must be remembered that besides Fee's home and a few other houses, there was still nothing here. Thus Rogers and his wife toiled on with fifteen pupils. "This was a strange and new experience for the young girl-wife, reared in the comforts of a Philadelphia home . . . " Let us not leave the impression that it was an unhappy year. Far from it! This was an adaptable couple who accepted the challenges of a man and wife, thoroughly steeped in a classical education, starting to teach fifteen pupils, many of whom could not yet read or write. Rogers' liberal attitude is shown, for example, in speaking of the hymns taught these children. "Perhaps some of the hymns would not bear criticism, but the simple truths they taught reached the simple hearts . . . "

By 1858 the idea of founding a college on the Ridge had grown until the moment was ripe for formal organization. Consequently in the same year, a constitution was drawn up and signed by John G. Fee, J. A. R. Rogers, J. S. Davis, George Candee, William Strapp, John G. Hanson, John Smith, T. J. Renfro, and John Brunam, although it was not until 1866 that the new organization was incorporated. Between the writing of the constitution and the incorporation, the exile of the Bereans and the Civil War intervened.

John Brown's raid at Harper's Ferry stirred the South and fear of slave insurrection was everywhere. Berea stood for liberty in a slave state, and soon the handful of citizens on the Ridge, who went entirely unarmed, became the center of rumors and suspicion in the minds of Kentucky people. Fee, in the East at the time, was thought to be raising John Browns for Kentucky.

Another story afoot was that a shipment of smuggled guns had been intercepted on the way to Berea. The whole state of affairs culminated in an ensemble of sixty men serving notice on eleven Berea families to leave their homes in ten days or suffer the consequences. An appeal to the Governor failed, and "The farewells were uttered and the exiles mounted their various vehicles to begin the march. They formed a motley but not dangerous procession, these 'people who were a menace to Kentucky.' Patriach, and babes in arms, a bride and groom, men and women in the prime of life, young people and children of all ages, moved slowly from the hill."

Before the exile, the leaders of the school bargained for 109 acres of land on the Ridge and during the War, Fee raised the money with which to pay for the Wooline Purchase. The exiles did return, Rogers as early as 1862, and the real start, the real period of development for Berea College, was yet to begin. At this stage, in 1866, "The college possessed 109 acres of uncleared woodlands, worth only a few dollars per acre, it had no endowment, no credit, no buildings of any kind." The years which followed were an attempt to remedy the situation, a remedy which became even more pressing as students began to flood the school. In these following years, the college began to clear its land, erected two small plaster buildings, a box chapel, a temporary Boarding Hall, two cottages for young men, and a combined store and dwelling for more teachers. Rogers and Fee, besides doing their regular work in Berea, were raising $18,000 for the erection of Howard Hall. Even more important was the calling of E. H. Fairchild to become Berea's first president in 1869.

Between 1869 and 1889 one can fairly say the college felt a period of sky-rocketing growth. In 1871 Ladies Hall was completed; in 1879 a frame Gothic Chapel; in 1882 the railroad came; in 1886 Lincoln Hall was finished; 430 students were enrolled; and the endowment was $100,000.

Generally not much is said for the intervening years between 1889 (Fairchild's death) and 1892, the beginning of William G. Frost's administration. A man by the name of Stewart was president, and he was by temperament suited to the work of a teacher rather than an administeative official. So there came a time of increasing debts and a corresponding loss of friends and influence for Berea.

In 1892 William Goodell Frost accepted the office of Berea's third president. He might be termed the great molder, the great adaptor. It would be foolish to speak of this man in terms of buildings, the evolution of a curriculum, the growth of the endowment, and as a factor in bringing Berea into some of the country's most influential circles, from T. R. Roosevelt to Woodrow Wilson. He did all these things, but more so let it be remembered that Frost brought to the college a sense of adaptability which is seldom seen in most institutions. We can show this by several pertinent illustrations. Over and over again, Frost repeated that even if a student comes to Berea for only five months, then these must be the most meaningful months of his life. The college must adapt to his needs and when the needs change then the college must readapt.

At the time when the "Day Law" was passed in 1904 the Berea endowment stood at about $400,000, money vitally needed by the school and collected only through the strenuous fund-raising campaigns of Rogers, Fairchild, and Frost. However, this money had been gathered at the time when Berea served both white and Negro students. Now the law required that Berea become either an all-white or all-Negro school. "From every side it was an awful situation to face. The principle prevailed that trust funds must be used in accordance with the representation made when they were secured. Clearly the colored should have half the $200,000 gathered by Rogers and Fairchild in reconstruction times when the colored constituted half the school . . . " The trustees worked out a formula by which half the property owned by the college up to 1892 and two-elevenths of the additional property secured when the Negroes were about one-seventh of the student body, making a sum in all of about $200,000, should go to the founding of a separate Negro school. Lincoln Institute in Kentucky. To this an additional $200,000 was placed in order that the new school might be a good school.

In the period following the "Day Law," electricity and student industries (as we know them in the modern sense) came to Berea. The last of the college lands were cleared. The Industrial Buildings, Pearsons Hall, Phelps Stokes, a stone part of the library, Talcott and Kentucky Halls, the main building of the Hospital, Fireside, and James Hall were built. The West End village grew. So, in 1920 Frost left to William J. Hutchins an institution with many students and many buildings plus an increasing endowment.

William J. Hutchins

The Inaugural Address of Francis S. Hutchins

William J. Hutchins became the fourth president. He served this post efficiently for nineteen years. One of the obstacles he faced was the depression. Even so, Berea weathered this crisis without any serious defects. This was largely due to the fact that late in 1914 Charles M. Hall died, leaving one-sixth of his residual estate of which Bereat gained possession in 1929. As the speculative stocks were sold, the returns from it became part of Berea's largest endowment. Because the mountain area was struck hard it was all the more reason for Berea to serve its students. In 1929 approximately 50% of the students were self-supporting, a good example of the college's ability to help its people.

In the year 1955 as one looks out across the campus, he seems many familiar buildings that were erected during the William J. Hutchins administration. Among these buildings are Union Church (1922); Emery Building (1924); Elizabeth Rogers Hall (1925); Woods-Pennman (1926); First Unit of Science Hall (1928); Seabury Gymnasium (1928); Vincent Goldthwait Memorial Agricultural Hall (1928); President's Home, Presser Music Hall (1931); New Wing of Hospital (1932); J. A. R. Rogers Art Building (1935); New Section of Library (1936); Draper Building begun in 1937, and other minor additions.

Berea's history during this administration was not without its troubles. Students were confronted with many problems. One difficulty was that of health. In 1929 there were 438 cases of influenza and 400 cases of scarlet fever. These were only some of the diseases which befell the students. There was talk at one time of abolishing the Christmas vacation, the reason being that students were returning to school with communicable diseases and spreading them to their classmates. Vacations were not abolished, even though the thought was given serious consideration.

Naval V-12 Unit

The expanding Berea was forced in 1925, for the first time, to refuse admission to mountain students even though they had graduated from accredited high schools. Since then many applications have been refused due to the limited facilities. This can be understood by the fact that at the beginning of William J. Hutchins' term there were only 253 students enrolled in the college courses of Berea. When he retired, this number had increased to school and a 4-year college.
over 400. By 1930 Berea obtained full standing in the Southern Association and made the approved list of the Association of American Universities. The endowment of the college rose from slightly over a million to more than $10,000,000. So ends the administration of William J. Hutchins, a man interested in Berea becoming the center of culture for the mountain people.

Francis S. Hutchins, son of William J. Hutchins, was chosen to become the fifth president when he was only 37. It is difficult to evaluate the work of a contemporary president. Usually such a history is not written until he has completed his duties. Even so, let us note a few developments. First was the organization of the college into an upper (Junior and Senior) division and a lower division (second year in high school to second year of college) plus the establishment of Foundation School as a Junior High. This later gave way to the present system of high school and four year college.

During the Second World War, Berea admitted a Naval V-12 unit to train officers. From 1943 until 1945 the records indicate that 783 men were given an education here, with several returning for their degrees. After the war, housing units were built to accommodate married veterans who wished to continue their schooling.

It was under this administration that the following changes took place. Humanities, Biological Science, Western Civilization, and Social Science were added to the curriculum. The use of testing as a method of classifying students was used more extensively. The Director of Admission office was established to replace some of the work done previously by the Registrar. Berea continued to grow both in size and endowment. Anna Smith dormitory and the completion of the Science Building are further proof of this growth.

Many things have necessarily been omitted in such a brief history. However, no one can overlook the splendid work of our labor program and the benefits the mountain people have derived from it. This labor program, it must be remembered, is a part of the students' education and an integral part of the history of the college.

So ends a history of the first one hundred years, fluctuating between men and circumstance. So ends the history of the first one hundred years without using the words "heroic" or "courageous," but we hope that in some small measure the reader will imagine the real heroism and courage which the times, not always favorable, drew out of the makers of Berea's history.

Oh, the Berea way is ok except that it is often too casual. If a man can wear denim pants to a formal occasion and yet maintain his integrity . . . fine. But when he wears denim and has no integrity, and even goes to noisy lengths convincing thers that he has no integrity, and, furthermore doesn't care—then I wonder what he does have?

$200 CAMERON

A few notes scrawled on the note pad, the incessant clickety-click-click of the typewriter as the news goes into the copy stage, and a rush to meet the Wednesday noon deadline.

Behind every edition of the weekly campus chronicle goes the unheralded work of those behind the scenes, the news editor who collects the tips and digs up the new leads; the reporters who ask the Who, What, Why, When, and Where; the typists who transfors the reporter's efforts into decent copy; the copyreader, who's hawk-eye scrutiny catches the tiny error—then to the press to be set in lead—then back again the story comes to the proofreader who scans it, headlines are written, and the layout artist designs the page locating its position.

—That's the life of a newspaperman —a scene re-enacted every week in preparing an edition of the PINNACLE to roll from the press on Saturday morning.

A struggle to stay above the red line of financial indebtedness—a searing editorial—a triangular battle between PINNACLE, the Student Council, and the American Tobacco Company—all were elements in the turbulent life of the campus newspaper, 1954-55 style.

As "Custodian of the Student's Right to Know," THE PINNACLE was never accused of dodging a controversal issue in breaking the news to the students.

And back the PINNACLE was a fine staff, many on whom the spotlight of recognition never focused, who fought and worked to make the paper.

Unpaid and unthanked they will remain for the most part, but as Volume 1 of THE BEREA PINNACLE, Centennial Edition, is closed—a tip of the hat to the representatives of the student press who served as a "Custodian of the Student's Right to Know."
